

Learning and Teaching Skills

What's this about?

A six hour, two sessions training looking at how you learn how to learn and how you learn how to teach - a deep understanding of one allows a deeper understanding of the other

Once you know how you learn, you know how to teach

What will this get you?

A deep understanding of how you learn, how you accrue the skills of learning, how you know what to learn and what not to learn

An appreciation of the different styles of individual learning and how you use those styles to the students and your own benefit

An understanding of how you create and maintain rapport with one or more persons, creating a safe learning environment leading to better communication with others and them with you

The skills of information chunking and how this relates to effective teaching and learning

Exquisite communication skills encouraging close interaction between student and teacher

Physiological skills in presentation and instruction with awareness of your student's response to your delivery

A planned, structured, balanced approach which allows the confidence in being flexible and "going with the flow"

An inner confidence

Who's it for?

Individuals who are involved in education, training and instruction at all levels

For more information?

Contact Paul Ludford at APLnlp, the details are below